Breakfast Briefing

CRIMEA

Human rights in Crimea five years after Russian annexation

How is it to live in Crimea after the annexation? What is the situation for human rights? And what was it like for people forced to flee at short notice?

Aiming to break the wall of silence around Crimea and document the human rights situation, representatives of Human Rights Houses from Ukraine, Azerbaijan, and Belarus visited the occupied peninsula from 14-18 September 2018. They have detailed their findings in the report "Crimea: Breaking the Wall of Silence", and several of them are coming to Oslo to present these findings.

Join for our briefing on Crimea on 21 March:

- Film: We will show a short film featuring interviews with the people the mission met.
- Exhibit: A human rights defender will share his experiences and present his story from "Suitcases of Crimean Human Rights Defenders", an intriguing exhibition of belongings telling about the lives of people forced to flee their homes.
- Findings and discussion: Prominent human rights defenders will present first-hand information from Crimea. They will offer recommendations ahead of Norway's high-level visit to Russia in April 2019.
